New York Times Article Reveals How Nursing Homes Feed Money into Corporate Webs

A New York Times article published January 2nd uncovers the practice of nursing home owners outsourcing goods and services to companies that they also control or have a financial interest. Nursing home owners say that these so-called "related party transactions" are an efficient way of running their businesses and help minimize taxes. However, these arrangements allow owners to put together advantageous contracts in which their nursing homes pay higher rates and the owners pocket the higher profits, which aren't recorded on the nursing home's accounts. Plus, these complicated arrangements make it more difficult for injured residents or their families to collect money from the related companies when they sue the nursing home.

An analysis from Kaiser Health News revealed that "nursing homes that outsource to related organizations tend to have significant shortcomings: They have fewer nurses and aides per patient, they have higher rates of patient injuries and unsafe practices, and they are the subject of complaints almost twice as often as independent homes."

Long-Term Care Resources & News
Conversation Guide for Caregivers on Fall Prevention

The National Alliance for Caregiving partnered with the National Coalition on Aging on a series of resources for family caregivers of older adults. Many caregivers may not realize that 1 in 4 adults over the age of 65 falls every year, injuring themselves and often exacerbating other conditions of aging. Falls are the leading cause of fatal and non-fatal injuries for older Americans; they are costly—in dollars and in quality of life. To read the guide, click here.

Spotlight on Resources
